

The War on Men

*“The war on masculinity has never been so brutal – but it’s not a war being waged by women. The attack is coming directly from the top, as the establishment desperately attempts to emasculate and disempower men in order to force women to be more dependent on the state, thereby enabling more power to be centralized and aiding the growth of big government.”*¹

So Writes Paul Watson in his infowars.com article. He points out these 10 ways that masculinity is being attacked.

1. Falling Fertility
2. Chemical Warfare “Feminizing” Boys
3. Degradation of Positive Masculine Role Models
4. Metrosexual Malaise
5. Cultural Marxism
6. The ‘Men are Paid More’ Myth
7. The “Privilege” Trap
8. The Legal System Discriminates Against Men
9. Masculinity as a Dirty Word
10. Domestic Abuse Against Men

Warwick Marsh of Fatherhood Foundation supported this article and sent an email about it which I’ve included over the page.

It is critical that leading men operate in true masculinity to provide a role model for young men. Men are abandoning their masculinity as they try to appeal to women and appease them, while working towards maintaining their employment in their job.

Not only that, but it’s not until we operate as genuine males, administering our roles in the family and society, that God gets glory from us. One source of glory to him comes whenever what he has created fully functions as it was intended to.

Let’s give him glory by the way we lead in a masculine, non-controlling, non-domineering, but authoritative and effective way that displays what a male of our species was created to look like.

There is a war on men but the greatest perpetrators are the men themselves. As Walt Kelly once said, "We have met the enemy and he is us". Our single greatest enemy is our own passivity – mine included. Daily, I make the decision as Robert Lewis says, to "reject passivity". That is why you are getting this newsletter. The number one objection women have about husbands is their passivity. I must own up to this problem too, but the good news is I am working on it.

Having said all that there is definitely a war on men and boys as Dr Christina Hoff Summers articulated so well in her ground breaking book The War Against Boys. Joseph Watson has written a very good article called, The War On Men: 10 Ways Masculinity is Under Attack and why the elite – not women – are to blame. For the sake of space I have listed only seven ways here, but read them all by clicking the link.

Men are facing a full frontal assault on their rights, health and culture like never before. The war on masculinity has never been so brutal – but it's not a war being waged by women. The attack is coming directly from the top, as the establishment desperately attempts to emasculate and disempower men in order to force women to be more dependent on the state, thereby enabling more power to be centralized and aiding the growth of big government.

Whilst I agree with many of the points Joseph Watson has raised, to blame the state for all of them is too simplistic. Having said that the political, legal, media and academic elites must bear the brunt of the blame. The current push for Homosexual Marriage is another factor in the war on men and masculinity as it will lead to the ultimate destruction of gender as the term male and female will become discriminatory.

Lovework

So what is the answer to the War on Men?

First we/you must do our own research and be fully informed. We cannot deny the reality of the vitriol against the male of the species. Joseph Watson is right, both men and women must work together to preserve the natural family and bring positive change for men and women, but particularly for our children. We must begin to speak up and be involved in the democratic process. We must abandon our passivity and engage in the battle for truth and counter the haters with love because as Dr Martin Luther King said,

"Darkness cannot drive out darkness: only light can do that. Hate cannot drive out hate: only love can do that."

Yours for out-loving our haters
