

The Transition During Transformation

Recently I have been uneasy, unable to settle as I've been discontented with life – you know, “there's got to be more”. In my prophetic journaling I received instruction that I'm going through a process of transformation which usually means a period of ‘dryness’. I was also given the remedy to my uneasiness:

“I have told you to wait for me, so wait patiently. Don't stress over what you can't see and can't do. All is not lost.

You are going through a process of refinement and this takes time. Relax in me and let me change you for your own good. If you stress, you counteract what I am doing. It is, however, OK to desire more. ‘More’ is not the problem, it's your mindset that is. Your attitude must be ‘rest’, because Heaven is a place of rest and that's where things happen. Rest and peace are hallmarks of my Kingdom, so align with these. Fix them into your daily routine so you are not marginalised from the fruit that they bring to you.

Yes, you are being tested. This is a constant situation with you as I'm wanting you to change and move forward – as much as you desire it.

Yes, things will be better for you in the future, but for now, relax and enjoy what I am doing in you and around you.”¹

Bill Yount has been experiencing the same transitional ‘blues’. His blog comments are very supportive:

“Have you been asking the question, “What is going on in my life?” You are probably in transition. Transition is when you don't seem to fit where you used to and wonder how you are going to fit anywhere in the future. God knows. He's excited for you.

Be patient during transition, you are getting a new transmission with upgraded gears.

Transition has a downside: It's a vulnerable time. During transition we can become vulnerable or weak because of the pressure the Lord allows to help change us to be more like Him. Under pressure what is in us comes out but not always the way we meant to say it. So often we are misunderstood during this vulnerable time.

Misunderstanding kills relationships and ministries more than anything. Let's talk it out.

I heard the Lord saying, “I have put certain gems of wisdom in some people you may not like. Love everyone for your own good and welfare. Yes, that does include your enemies.” (Ouch!)

During transition, many are tempted to quit or blame the Lord for not changing things or circumstances instead of yielding to His Spirit to help change ourselves...”²

Much ‘food for thought’ and a lot of mind changing for me so I can rest in this transformation process. And, I've got to continually remind myself to enjoy the process³ so I go through it as quickly as possible.
