“China's "social credit" system, which will assign every person a constantly updated score based on observed behaviors, is designed to control conduct by giving the ruling Communist Party the ability to administer punishments and hand out rewards. The former deputy director of the State Council's development research center says the system should be administered so that "discredited people become bankrupt".”

How secure are the world's food supplies?

October 1, 2018

Trumpet Brief

Dear Laurence,

"It's kind of amazing that our future food supply depends so much on what happens in this one country." Those are the words of journalist Brendan Borrell during an interview with Planet Money earlier this year.

He was talking about Morocco.

The reason our future food supply depends so much on this North African country is because it is home to some 75 percent of the world's known phosphorus reserves. This gives Morocco a near-monopoly on the trade of the mineral.

BREAKPOINT

“Most Americans were unaware such a thing was possible, never mind commonplace, until Barbra Streisand mentioned it in passing during an interview with Variety magazine that her two current dogs were clones of her dog Samantha, who died last year.”
