False Masculinity & Femininity<sup>1</sup>

Revision

We've learnt<sup>2</sup> that Adam and Ezer operated in perfect masculinity and femininity in The Garden near Eden. This was a perfect environment so they manifested their gender perfectly. However, following The Fall, these were corrupted so we now operate in debased ways, even the best of us.

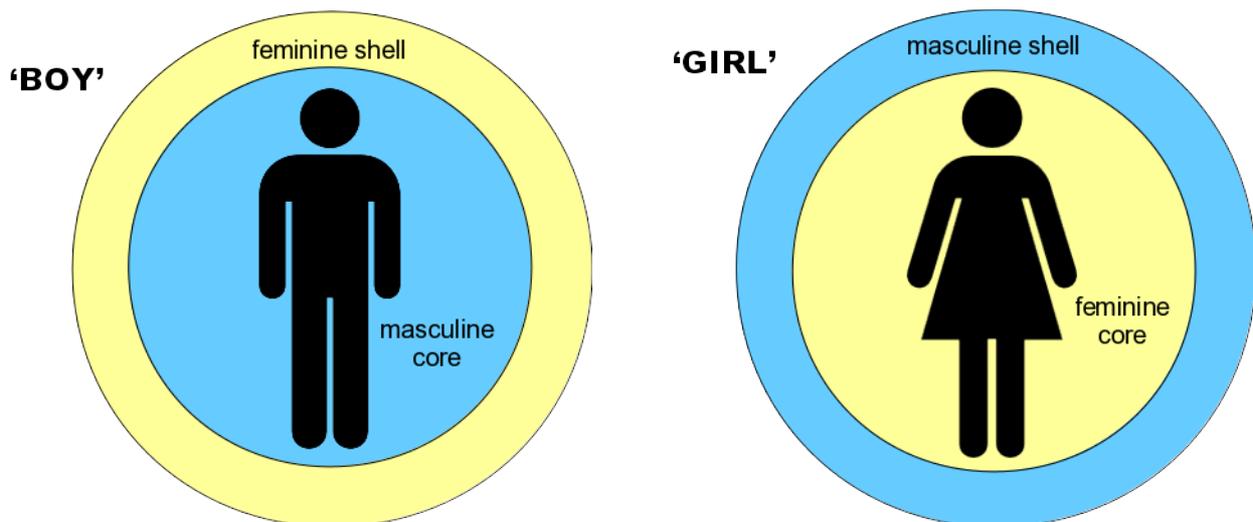

We have no idea what our perfect core gender characteristics are because our upbringing, culture and the church have given us cock-eyed notions about how men and women operate. At the core we still have genuine masculinity and femininity, and as Kingdom citizens we need to find out what they are like. This is as important for us as learning to live and operate as genuine sons.

To help clear away the confusion of why we're not functioning properly in our native gender, here's an insight into why we are corrupt in this area.

Our Shells

We are masculine and feminine at the core, but we put around ourselves shells which are the opposite. At the core a male is masculine but he has a feminine shell around him. Or, at the core a woman is feminine but around that she has a shell that's masculine.

This commonly happens in a distorted family household where there's an example for the children of a passive man (the father) or an aggressive woman (the mother). These are the psychological imprinters that the child comes under. For example: A boy growing up in such a family who doesn't want to constantly fight with his parents learns to put a feminine shell around himself. That feminine shell makes the boy into a pleaser so he doesn't get attacked in psychological ways. In this type of situation this what has occurred psychologically: 'What's rewarded gets repeated and what's punished gets hidden'.

1 – The information about gender shells in this article is based on Jonathan Welton's teaching video, "Understanding Masculinity and Femininity" (a WeltonVlog Special Episode) www.youtube.com/watch?v=8YEtWgdSbfs

So, the boy grows with a masculine core which looks for masculinity, affirmation and initiation into manhood so he can be content in his masculinity, but it doesn't happen. The domineering female does not provide the example of masculinity, or even allow one, which the boy essentially needs. The situation is the same if there isn't a masculine man in the boy's home. The father may be away, in prison, travelling, trucking, or just plain absent (e.g. gambling or at the pub). In both situations, the boy lives with a core of masculinity, but with a feminine shell of protection. A lot of men live their lives here, but it feels horrible.

Similarly, a girl growing up in a household where the father is scary, angry, dominating, controlling, an alcoholic or goes into rages, the femininity will be shut down in her. If there's abuse of some sort, the free-flowing, carefree, joyful little girl gets squashed or shut down. She learns to protect herself with a masculine shell so she doesn't have to fight so much and can also use it to defend herself.

The protective shell for the young man is called a 'mummy's boy'. They get closer to their mother because she's the scary, dominating parent. When they are closer, they feel safer. It's the 'teacher's pet' idea where that kind of relationship protects the child. They learn to interact with the world of women so they aren't harmed by it and figure out how to live their lives in safety. Unfortunately, he doesn't know how to enter into the world of men because there's no one to lead him there. This is the lot of many young men today, and it's exacerbated by being part of a 'fatherless generation'.

The biggest problem for young men today is that there's no initiation into manhood. It used to be that there was a father or grandfather or a group of men who show boys how to operate as a man, but in a place away from their mother. Sometimes there was an initiation ceremony at the end of the training, but for Westerners it was their father's approval that they'd 'arrived' and were functioning as a man. This approval was critical for stabilizing the young man so they were content with who they were.

There were 3 components that were essential for a youth's progress into manhood in the past:

1. A mentor – A man who modelled manhood to them.
2. A sacred space – A place where young men were taken and trained.
3. A ritual – A ceremony or an initiation that cemented in the boys that they were now men.

This is mostly missing today as masculine are aggressively attacked by adherents to the women's power movement and shut down as misogynistic and seen as detrimental to modern society. As a consequence there's a huge attraction to places where men feel they can be masculine: e.g. fraternity, club, gang, prison, military, sport, etc. These produce the 'tribal effect' where men feel they belong.

The gender problem for both young men and women is a societal problem, not a youth problem. Society has created the problem and society has to fix it for the benefit of future generations. It's a cultural failure because we haven't taught them how to be adults, because we don't know what that means any more. We've also lost the processes of initiating them into their gender roles. The affirmation from an elder man or older woman is missing, so the current generations float around unsure of themselves.

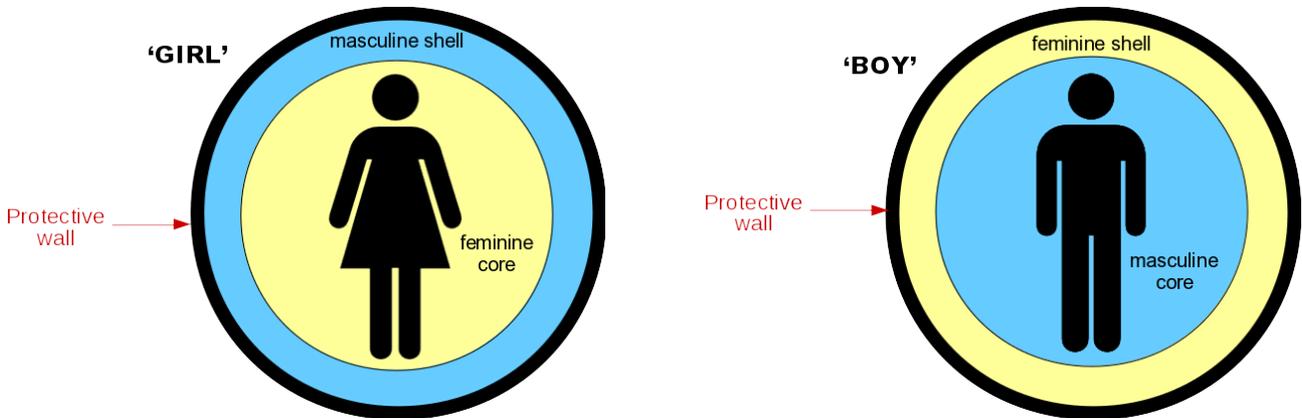

The gender initiation process is a form of imprinting. However, reverse gender imprinting can naturally occur in a safe environment where there are the wrong role models. A tom-boy is a girl who grows up with male influence and the lack of an influential female role-model. Men who work for extended periods of time in predominantly female environments such as a hairdressing salon or in fashion become effeminate because of the absence of strong male role-models. In both these cases a cross-gender shell develops around them.

All those with gender shells will find a strong pull towards the gay lifestyle. Their confusion over their gender and their desire to continue protecting themselves both drive this change in direction.

Our Protective Walls

Added to the shells that we put around us as we grow up in our malfunctioning (i.e. non-Kingdom) family we add an outer protective layer on top of it. This layer we deliberately put in place at an older age because we decide that we need to protect ourselves from a real or perceived threat. This outer layer modifies our displayed gender to an even greater level.

This protective wall can be built from a variety of initial traumas and can be added to by subsequent ones. Some of these traumatic instigators are:

- Women's lib – I'm going to be equal to a man so I'll act aggressively to achieve it.
- #metoo movement – I'm oppressed by men so I'll aggressively stand against anything I don't like that they do or say.
- Aggressive bosses – My boss is agro all the time so I'll put up a wall so he doesn't hurt me.
- Military experience – I need to toughen up because war is 'hell' and my team is depending on me.
- Hazing & bullying – I will become aggressive towards those who try to belittle me and physically hurt me.
- Peer pressure – I need to be macho and not let anything affect me so I can be part of this group.
- Divorce – I will never let a man/woman hurt me ever again.
- Attacks on character or personality – I will become aggressive towards those who try to belittle me to protect my self-esteem.

As a consequence of our shells and walls we don't act like genuine men and women, but rather like boys and girls in our immaturity (hence the use of these terms in the graphics). Adults shouldn't need to have these protective layers as their genuine masculinity and femininity should allow them to handle every situation and circumstance. Instead we resort to the various childish methods of façades.

Admonition

Our responsibility as Kingdom citizens is to find out what genuine masculinity and femininity are so we can change the way we operate and align ourselves with the way we're supposed to be as a new species. Then we have to model these to the next and subsequent generations so there is a movement in the Earth in the direction of restoration in this area. It's essential at this point in time with the push for gender fluidity so that many can be prevented from being captured by the enemy .

In the next 2 sessions we will find out more on genuine masculinity and femininity. We will also discover that pusillanimous Christianity is as misdirected as the world is in this matter.
