The Law was Never Meant to be Introduced

The first instructions from God were those he gave to Adam for him to pass on to all of humanity

These were guidelines, not laws like the Torah

The next instructions from God for humanity were the simple Noahide laws.

So why was it necessary to bring in the Law with Israel with very prescriptive rules?

Why a radical shift from instructions to the Law?

There must have been a reason for it

If the ideal was to have the 'law' written on our hearts, why not go straight there with Israel, rather than an interlude with the Torah as the standard?

There must have been a reason for it

In the same way that Jesus never intended for his New Covenant (NC) people to belong to a religion using his name, he never wanted his Old Covenant (OC) people to be in Judaism.

In the same way that Jesus never intended for his NC people to be in an organisation, he never intended the Israelites to be under a code of written Law.

Instead,

- His NC people are to be a 'living' organism of spiritual people, &
- His OC people were to be in personal relationship with him, just like Noah and Enoch were.

Theology and pulpit teaching will not get us to the truth of this because they are rooted in 2,000 years of religion and legalism which masquerades as the complete truth.

We already know that Jesus never came to set up a new religion but he let people do it.

So, what about his OC people and the Law?

All my statements may sound like heresy, but the truth can only be found in two places:

1. Research the 'seed' of these people in the Bible
2. Ask him what his intentions were

'Seed' questions:

Wasn't Abraham justified by his faith?

Yes. His obedience was all that was required of him.

He wasn't required to follow a set of laws before he could please God.

Mike Parsons has an answer Father's intentions:
