

Life in the Spirit Fixes a Broken Heart

Yes, life in the Spirit does fix a broken heart. That's because genuine spiritual life is allowing Jesus to live his life in us and through us.

Here's what he said about it recently:

“When your heart is broken and everything around you seems to have been changed beyond recognition, you must look to Me...You cannot change the past. You only have today to seek My face and choose life in the Spirit.”<sup>1</sup>

When he becomes your source of supply for your every need and you live out of your Internal Kingdom, you draw from him and he meets the need of a broken heart. Whatever your need is, he's guaranteed to meet it (supply it or fix it).

Nothing is too hard for him to remedy, but it can't happen until you rely solely on him. We have autonomy to make our own decisions as planet managers and he allows us to operate in that level of self-authority. He won't override our self-determination and decision-making because he honours how he created us.

However, when we voluntarily surrender our autonomy to him, and work in tandem with him, he is then given our permission to work for us. You see, while ever we want to be in control, he'll let us – that's our created position. But, when we submit ourselves to him as King of Kings and allow him and Father to oversee our lives, and we lean into him for the supply of everything, he'll meet all our needs when we 'take our hands off'.

That need can even be a broken heart, and he'll repair it. He'll do it very easily if we allow him to become our Beloved, rather than any other person. His love and his honourable allegiance to us is better than the relationship any human can give us. That new relationship will heal our heart and we'll be living in the Spirit, even though we didn't know we were heading that way.
