- “Videos Expose Communist Influence Behind Bid to Change Australia’s Constitution”

“The underlying communist influence behind a proposal to change Australia’s Constitution continues to come to light. The campaign group against the Indigenous Voice to Parliament, Advance Australia, has uncovered videos of Teela Reid, a member of The Voice referendum working group, praising the Communist Party of Australia for fighting “with and beside” Aboriginals for land rights.”

- “Cook government to scrap Aboriginal Cultural Heritage Act after months of controversy”

“The West Australian government will scrap its controversial Aboriginal Cultural Heritage Laws within days, the ABC understands. Premier Roger Cook and Minister for Aboriginal Affairs Tony Buti will make an announcement early next week. It follows months of harsh criticism of the laws and the government in the lead up to their implementation on July 1 and in the weeks following. The criticism has been led by WA’s opposition parties – the Nationals and Liberals – along with farmers groups including WAFarmers and the Pastoralists and Graziers Association”

- “Indigenous Elder left culturally devastated after Channel 7 shunned Welcome to Country at Matildas match”

“The Welcome to Country and accompanying Indigenous dancers were seen but not heard by the television audience tuned into Australia’s opening FIFA Women’s World Cup match against Ireland, angering the Aboriginal Elder delivering the acknowledgment on the World Cup stage. While the more than 75,000 in attendance at Stadium Australia could appreciate the First Nations presentation, three free-to-air TV commentators talked over the top of the presentation, quelling the interest of viewers at home. Dharug Elder Aunty Julie Jones was left bitterly disappointed after learning days later that Channel 7 commentators had “silenced the voices and the storytelling of women that have been a part of the oldest living culture on the planet”. “It was culturally devastating,” she told NITV.”

- “Acknowledging Country: Why Do Australians Like Apologising so Much?”

“Can anybody tell me how many generations need to pass before we should stop nurturing guilt for the deeds of our ancestors? Two thousand years, 200 years, maybe just a century? If you detect a certain sarcasm in what I’ve said, you are right. I am grieved and wearied by our Australian obsession with apology. Some members of my family came to Australia more than 200 years ago. The Aboriginals who were here when my people arrived and their descendants today have a far, far longer claim to indigeneity, but what has mere duration got to do with it?"

- “Landholders sign over private property for perpetual conservation in NSW”

“The NSW government will spend $140m to secure another 200,000 hectares of private land for conservation by 2025. The push will help Australia meet its commitment to preserve 30 per cent of land for conservation by 2030.”

- “Canning River tree planting halted after Aboriginal corporation ‘demands $2.5 million’”

“Amid ongoing confusion over the implementation of Western Australia’s controversial new cultural heritage laws, two major tree planting events in the state were cancelled this weekend after an Aboriginal corporation demanded $2.5 million for approval, according to a report... The planting of 5500 shrubs and trees along Perth’s Canning River by 120 volunteers was called off, after a demand from the newly formed Whadjuk Aboriginal Corporation that any planting at sites of cultural significance along the river cease.”

- “Australian Schools Can Secretly Change Kids’ Gender Without Parental Consent”

“Australian kids in public schools can consider a gender transition without needing to worry about their parents finding out if school principals determine the child is a “mature minor,” as is the case in Victoria, or when there are “reasonable grounds” such as court orders to stay mum about it, as is the case in New South Wales.”

- “Victoria to Conduct Nations’ First Pet Census in Early July”

“The Andrews Labor Government will conduct the nation’s first Pet Census in Victoria on July 3 to help build the future of animal welfare and assist pet owners with the support and services they need... Tierney told the Society that it is important to get key information on pets, pet ownership, and owners’ experiences, insights or opinions before any reform on animal welfare is taken. “The Victorian Pet Census will gather vital information which will help shape the next generation of pet and animal welfare reforms,” she said.”
