

Eternal Blessings Begin Now, Not After We Die

I don't think we really get it. I think we're so indoctrinated that we really believe that we only enter the Kingdom after we die. It appears to me that we think like that because we can't see it happening now. But that's not the reality that's supposed to be our experience.

Whatever we think, it's what the Trinity says about it should be what we believe. Here's an example:

*"I offer you a life of abundance, joy, and grace—a life of eternal blessing that begins here on Earth. But more than anything, your devotion to me is rewarded with something much more profound than anything Earth can offer. You will experience more of my tangible presence, because you will be free from the entanglements of earthly distraction."*¹

If that's the reality, then we must be faltering in some way, preventing it from manifesting in our lives. It reminds me of the way genuine faith healers of the past told their hearers that divine health is the way we should be living our lives. But we don't live that way, do we.

Obviously there's a huge gulf between the Kingdom life and our expectation of it. It appears to me that we don't expect the Kingdom life to manifest (through lack of genuine faith), so it doesn't.

We really have a great deal to learn to live the Kingdom life as it's meant to be – right now.
