- “Texas’ Green Energy Dream Is Risking Its Electric Grid”
“Since Texas weathered its second-hottest summer on record and faced unprecedented demands on its power grid, the future of energy supply and use in the state—and across the country—has become the subject of national discussion. Air conditioners were in constant use in Texas over the summer as average temperatures reached 85.3 degrees between June and August and didn't dip below 100 degrees for weeks on end in some cities. The strain that the soaring temperatures put on the Electric Reliability Council of Texas (ERCOT), the state’s energy distribution network, is severe, no matter the circumstances.”

- “Australia's Capital Bans New Gas Connections From December”
“The Australian Capital Territory (ACT) will ban new gas network connections on buildings from Dec. 8 this year. The Labor and Greens government will stop connections at all residential, commercial, and community facility zones as part of its net zero push. The new law will also apply to major renovation projects and knockdown rebuilds where a gas connection has been removed. Emissions Reduction Minister Shane Rattenbury said the regulation would “help electrify” the city and achieve a “sustainable, zero emissions future.””

“Former Prime Minister Tony Abbott says the climate change movement will eventually be discredited and that reaching net zero by 2050 was irrational... Mr. Abbott, speaking on the sidelines of the conference at an event for the Institute of Public Affairs (IPA), the former prime minister said achieving net zero by 2050 was not just “utterly irrational, but actually impossible.””
